

Rhizome Growth

Written by George Faerber
Saturday, 04 September 2010 22:01

---

Rhizomes seem to follow me around. While each of these plants appear to be separate units, they are stalks formed up from a single runner under the sand. The plant shoots out tendrils and these sorts of rhizometric growths play a huge role in the control of dune erosion. This photo was taken on St Simons Island, near East Beach, in Georgia.

